FORD TOPS LIST OF UK'S FAVOURITE USED CARS

- Ford has proved its enduring popularity as its Fiesta and Focus models topped the list of the most popular used cars over the last three years
- Back in black: black cars dominate the used car market making up a fifth (21.5%) of all car sales

- But could brown be the new black? Sales of brown cars have seen the largest upward trend (5.3%), beating purple (3.5%), orange (3.3%) and grey (2.6%)

London, 10 July 2018 - Ford has shown that it's an enduring favourite among second-hand car buyers as research into used buying trends by AA Cars, the AA's used car website, reveals that sales of the Focus and Fiesta have topped all other models in the last three years.

The Ford Fiesta has sold more models over the past three years than any other car on the used car portal - and holds a 5.05% share of cars sold over that period. Its larger sibling, the Focus, follows closely behind and accounts for nearly four per cent of all cars sold over the same period.

The Fiesta and the Focus were also among the top three best selling cars on AA Cars in the first quarter of the year, although the Vauxhall Corsa pipped the Focus to second place.

Since 2015, the Honda HR-V has seen a 748% increase in sales - the crossover SUV has seen the biggest surge in popularity over that time period since a second generation of the vehicle was reintroduced to the market in 2015. Meanwhile, the Vauxhall VIVA (591.23%) and Hyundai Tucson (579.55%) also saw notable leaps.

Holding their value both in terms of price and taste level, black cars have overturned the status quo held by white cars over the last few years. Black is back in vogue as black cars now make up more than a fifth (21.5%) of used car transactions, with white and silver cars in second and third place.

Interestingly though, the data shows an increased appetite for less conventional car colours with the sale of used brown cars showing an upward trend of 5.3%. Over the last three years, brown cars have proven to be more popular than other left field colours such as purple (3.5%) and orange (3.3%). The sale of used brown cars is trending more than twice that of the colour grey, coming in at just 2.6%.

It's important to note that while trends in the used car market tend to mimic buying habits in the new market - as higher availability of certain new models will make their way to used dealerships - they aren't directly interchangeable.

James Fairclough, CEO of AA Cars comments: "The rise of car finance products ensures that customers are more regularly upgrading to new cars, meaning the flow of nearly new vehicles into second-hand dealerships has boosted the value and quality of stock on sale.

This comprehensive temperature test of the second-hand car market shows that old favourites from Ford, Vauxhall and Nissan continue to dominate market share.

Colour still plays a big determining factor when buyers are choosing a car - it's not surprising to see black, white and silver vying for the top spot. More popular shades tend to hold residual values better compared to more unusual colours.

However, it is more surprising to see increased appetite for brown cars. Brown has historically been an unpopular choice among car buyers, but more than a 5% increase over a three-year period is notable. On a practical side of things, darker colours do hide blemishes better - which could account for this increased uptake.

While style and make might be the biggest determining factors when shopping around for a car, it's important that you're not transfixed by the idea of owning your dream vehicle and overlook other key factors. After all, two used cars might look exactly the same and be in very different condition - if you are set on owning a certain model but you're worried not everything is as it seems, it's worth considering a pre-sale vehicle inspection to give you real peace of mind."
